

Worldwide, women are shouting “ENOUGH” to repressive policies and the violation of our bodily autonomy. Relying on politicians and professional experts to protect our rights will always fall short of liberation. The power to create change resides in collective grassroots action. This fight is about abortion rights, yes, but reproductive justice and the issues of our time demand more!

- The right to bodily autonomy means the right to abortion on demand and the right for women, non-binary, and trans people to have governance over our own bodies.
- Even before Roe was overturned, the Hyde Amendment prohibited federal funding for abortion, preventing people in most states who were enrolled in Medicaid and other public programs from using their health insurance to cover abortion care. It disproportionately impacts people already facing systemic barriers to care, particularly Black and Indigenous folks, other people of color, and people with disabilities. It must be repealed!
- On November 9, the Supreme Court will consider a challenge to the constitutionality of the Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA), which upholds family integrity and stability by keeping Indian children connected to their community and culture. Tribal sovereignty is imperative in this intersectional fight.

This movement requires the might of all of us. There is a place for you in the National Mobilization for Reproductive Justice!
